

How we make you feel at ease during a hearing test at

Hearology®

Hearology is an ear care company

We understand that the prospect of confirming hearing loss is not a very palatable one, and the prospect of having to buy and wear hearing aids possibly even less so. This is why it's important that Hearology, unlike most of our competitors, employs Clinical Audiologists, NOT hearing aid dispensers. And, unlike nearly all of our competitors, our Audiologists are not paid commission on hearing aid sales.

We take this stance at Hearology to ensure full objectivity in our evaluation of your (perceived) hearing loss. Because, whilst the solution is not always hearing aids, it is always some form of ear care. And Hearology is an ear care company. Ears are all we do.

The solution is not always hearing aids

Something has obviously made you think about booking an appointment with us, and whatever this is, we will get to the bottom of it, and we will do so with care and objectivity. For this reason, many of our hearing test clients go on to see our microsuction ear cleaning team, our ENT Doctor, or our Balance Specialist – because they have only very mild, or no hearing loss at all. What they often do have is ear wax, an ear canal infection, or a balance system or middle ear issue. And the courage to come and get it checked out.

Hearology Aftercare

Not many will tell you that hearing aids need to be serviced at least twice a year, or that you need to maintain them on a weekly basis. Nor will many tell you that most hearing aids end up getting left in a drawer due to lack of maintenance.

This is why Hearology places such great emphasis on hearing aid aftercare:
